

Kendyl White

Facebook

Like I mentioned before, Facebook is disappointingly one of the worst apps that I use. It's so bad that I don't even have it either of my phones; I only have it on my iPad. I don't even allow notifications for this app, because it's so annoying. Facebook is the richest social network there is and it's a shame that apps such as Twitter and Instagram are so far ahead of Facebook. The feeds on Facebook are just not what you ask for. If I were in charge of the app, I'd make it way more customizable for the user. I'd make it to where if you want your feed to be G-rated, you can turn that on. Some of the stuff you see is just disturbing. The whole thing about being forced to download the Facebook Messenger app is just upsetting from a company like this. Some people may prefer to have that because they don't have to go on their actual Facebook to reply to a message, but other people including the older generation don't want that. This would be another thing I could change about this app. I'd keep the Messenger app, but I wouldn't force people to download it. Another thing I'd fix is the notifications you receive. A lot of it is just annoying stuff that you really don't care about such as birthdays of people you don't know and game requests for games you don't even have installed. That's another customizable thing to add because some people do care for those features but I am not one of them.